I have been having fun making music lately, and I made this drum kit for my fun. I used a Roland TD-5 Tap Delay, which I got from iamklinx.com. It's the best one I found on the internet. It wasn't very easy to get the triggers and knobs in the right place, and it wasn't very easy to get the right sampling rate, but this is a fun project. I have a huge stock of percussion and drum samples, and I made a bonus folder at the end of the video that explains some of the folder names. Enjoy the drum kit and have fun with it. Episode 2: Drums - 'Master of the House' This drum kit is produced by Conrad and is the second in my drum kit production. This kit is recorded using a Yamaha DR-550 Drum Pad and a Roland TD-5 drum pad trigger. It is sampled in a similar way as the previous drum kit, which means you can use this drum kit with any other kit or backing track. One of the major features of this drum kit is the inclusion of a huge number of additional drum fills which are essential if you're looking to play this kit in a live setting. The other major thing about this kit is that it's probably one of the most realistic drum kits I've ever made. I hope you enjoy the drum kit. Background: My first drum kit, which was very basic and not very realistic, was recorded using a Roland TD-5 and Korg 010. This kit was the first sample I recorded and it was produced using the software entitled Drumcode, which I found at : ZynAddSub. The next kit I made was a bit more realistic, and it was produced using a Roland TD-5 and Roland RB-18. Although this kit was a bit more realistic than the previous one, it was still not the kit I really wanted. At this point, I went to the internet and found another thing called "iDrum", which allowed you to sample things like kick, snare, and cymbals. This was a huge step forward because it meant that I could go into the future and produce more realistic drum kits. After doing that, I came across a program called "Drumcode" which is the software I use to produce all of my drum kits. It's a great program, and one that I recommend to people who want to learn about sampling. I'm 82157476af
